Key Takeaways

A standard residential electrical distribution box in East Africa typically costs between USD 50 and USD 250, depending on size, material, and features. Price Range and Factors

In East African countries such as Kenya, Uganda, and Tanzania, residential electrical distribution boxes (also called DB boxes or panel boxes) are widely available. Basic single-phase units suitable for small homes generally start around USD 50-100, while larger or more advanced units with multiple circuits, three-phase compatibility, or weather-resistant enclosures can cost USD 150-250 or more depending on specifications and brand (Ferinox Ventures) . Key factors affecting cost include:

- Number of circuits: More circuits require larger enclosures and more internal components.
- Material: Steel or high-quality PVC enclosures are more durable and slightly more expensive.

- Features: Units with integrated DIN rails, MCBs, relays, or smart monitoring systems increase the price.
 - Installation type: Wall-mounted vs. free-standing units may influence cost.
- Installation Considerations

While the box itself is a major component, installation costs should also be considered. Hiring a licensed electrician in East Africa may cost additional fees, which vary by country and complexity of the wiring. For example, wiring a typical 3-bedroom house can range from USD 200–500, depending on labor rates and materials used .

Where to Buy

- Ferinox Ventures Ltd supplies electrical panel boxes across Kenya, Uganda, and Tanzania, including accessories like MCBs, relays, and DIN rails for a complete setup .
- Local hardware and electrical supply stores in major cities also stock standard residential DB boxes, often with options for customization.

Summary

For a typical East African home, expect to pay USD 50–250 for the distribution box itself, with additional costs for installation and accessories. Choosing a quality, certified unit ensures safety, durability, and compliance with local electrical standards, which is crucial for residential power distribution .
